NIL FALSI AUDEAM. NIL VERI NOS "AUDEAM DICERE". (Cicero.)

WEDNESDAY 23rd JULY 1862.

The March of Congress.

Two months have elapsed since the National Chambers were opened by General Mitre, and, if we consider the slow habits incidental to the climate, it must be admitted that our legislators have a good amount of lab or to show, in proof of their worthiness to carry out the great designs entrusted to them. No slight efforts were expended on them by the Executive at first, it was brushed that they favored under a vis inertiæ which gave them excuse for absence on a passing shower, or even exception to a birlocha. Apon much valuable time was thus lost. Laws in the Beginning of Congress, when the grand question of municipals imperatively demanded consideration; and the public were condemned one day to go without dinner, in expectation of the introduction of the Cordoba Deputies. Here it would seem that the Lower Chamber favored undue procrastination, even more than their Senatorial brethren. Yet both Houses have now fairly set themselves to work, taking the heavier matters for discussion.

All preliminary measures, such as the new turn in events necessarily called forth, have been despatched by both, or either, of the Chambers, and the accession of Mitre to the Presidency will be a signal that the Republic is entered on its normal course of policy, and bid a long adieu to temporary arrangements or exceptional cases. The vote of confidence in our Governor has been completed by the late act, giving him possession of all the elements of National power. This would seem a corollary of the capital question, and was clearly involved in to the Deputies, before the latter, which was still under debate in the Senate. Hereby the design of federalization loses its venom, for indeed Buenos Ayres has little left, when her characteristics of Nationality pass to the Executive of the Republic. At the same time, the cause of Argentine unity receives additional security from this consolidation of all the resources of the 14 provinces under one Master.

The railroad to Cordoba is a stride into the interior, which will regenerate a country first explored by the Jesuits and then [illegible] zed by evil eyes. The [illegible] proposed to [illegible] means of our senators [illegible] vision, of the [illegible] other act of [illegible] look [illegible] in [illegible] in connection [illegible] peaceful [illegible]

The [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] though [illegible] one [illegible] a [illegible] [illegible] such [illegible] in Europe, that [illegible] the London bondholders would not have thought a second of it, if we ignored the state Government and shin plasters of Paraná, in toto.

The attempt to steady that fluctuating commodity—[illegible]—is also meritorious, even though the results be not crowned with complete success. The true we see got rise in face of the proposed remedy for this agio, yet we may conclude that the gambling of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] back: the other is in a balsa: they are both accompanied with danger, even to a swimmer, particularly during the rainy season, when large stones and trunks of trees are carried down the stream with frightful rapidity. When the river is too deep to be forded, the traveller mounts an unsaddled horse, places his body in an inclined position, grasps with his hands the mane of the animal, which plunging into the stream, swims off with him to the opposite bank. The balsa is a boat made of a bullock's hide, and is constructed in the following manner. Take a dried bullock's hide, pinch up each of the four corners, put a stitch with a thorn to keep them together, and your boat is made. When about to be used, place it upon the water, bottom downwards, and to prevent its natural tendency to turn upwards, put one foot into the centre of it, and let the other follow with caution—then, after sinking in the middle of it, you then gradually contract your body downwards, and sit at the bottom; and the boat becomes perfectly steady.

The River Santiago del Estero is four hundred yards in width, and extremely rapid during the rainy season, when streams of water flow into it in their descent from the mountains. I crossed it on two occasions, on the road to the town whose name it bears, in this singular balsa, or boat, which is conducted by a poor, naked Indian doctor (swimmer) who, previous to taking charge of it, examines if it is leaky till it sinks an inch, or an inch and a half below the water's edge, when it is considered safe for transit.

There are few persons who cross this river without a feeling of nervous excitement—such was the case with me, even previous to my passage; for I thought that the balsa and myself would go to the bottom; this dread was considerably enhanced, as a naked peon plunged into the stream, and taking hold of the corner of the balsa, inquired if I was comfortable.—Yes, V. bien?—I replied to his question with a faltering yes—though my countenance must have belied the happy condition. A peon on shore gave a slight impulse to the balsa, which if the fellow in the water, (my guide) had a corner with one hand, propelled out with the other, and swam with me to the opposite bank.

I felt an indescribable pleasure on landing, for I thought that the balsa would either have sunk, or have been overturned by hurricanes, which were hurried down the stream, during the twenty minutes we were crossing it. Special care is required when two persons are passing in the balsa, as the movement of one would incline the boat to the opposite side, and consequently endanger the safety of the other. Two persons are frequently drowned annually in attempting to cross the river in this manner.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

Death of Mr. Buckle.

Mr. Buckle, the author of the "History of Civilization in England," died on the 29th of May, at Damascus, in the early age of forty, before the completion of his great work will be known to deposited by all—whatever may be their opinions on religious, social, or political theories—who seek to obtain clear and data on which to exercise their judgment. Mr. Buckle was born at Lee, Nov. 24, 1822. His father was a wealthy merchant, and he enjoyed the advantages of an excellent education in Dr. James Thomas Hodgway's school at Gordon House, Kensington, and subsequently at private tuition under the Rev. Charles Bulley. He commenced literature and science library in his father's counting-house; but instead of giving his attention to business, he devoted it to chess, and exhibited as much aptitude for this game that he gained the reputation of being one of the first players of England, if not of the world. His father dying in 1840 and leaving him an ample fortune, he was enabled to indulge his taste for books, and devoted himself there forth entirely to literary pursuits, for which he was, by his seclusion and studious habits, better qualified than for more active occupations.

Entertainment to the representatives of the foreign press.

It is now definitively settled that the entertainment to be given to the representatives of the foreign press will be on Tuesday next, take place at eight o'clock precisely evening at St. James's Hall. This project, originally set on foot by the members of the Savage Club, has received the hearty approval and co-operation of gentlemen, sufficient not only to insure success, but in various branches of literature, science, and art, and several prominent members of the provincial press have intimated their intention to take part in this hospitable demonstration. There can be no difficulty or difficulty in the fellow impression which must exist on Continental literary friends appear to have correct of English life and character than those bringing them into close contact with those who are most capable of enlightening them on these points, and this entertainment will therefore not only be a grace-ful act of courtesy, but may be productive of substantially useful results.

Life in China.

A private letter from China gives a curious view of the state of things in the empire. The letter says:—"All is still in one of the finest provinces of the Great river. The plains are shooting is magnificent. But the people are very turbulent. We live in a perpetual state of warfare, have our houses broken into periodically, and have been compelled to open the Concession more than once at the point of the bayonet. As we can not only consult and whom and then a single officer goes, either on business or for pleasure, a mounted escort of Chinese soldiers, armed with matchlocks, swords, and shields, must be provided. The Chinese soldiers are the most cowardly fellows I ever saw. I think a couple of Europeans could put a hundred of them to flight. They have no idea of discipline, and are always ready to run away. They have no idea of discipline, and are always ready to run away. They have no idea of discipline, and are always ready to run away

SHEEP—SHEEP—SHEEP

Important to Sheep Farmers.

A sure cure for the Scab in Sheep.

The undersigned has the pleasure of announcing to the Wool Growers of this country, that he has now received a large quantity of the celebrated South Down Sheep Wash.

This valuable preparation is highly recommended for its safety, convenience, utility and economy. It is a concentrated extract, one pound of which is equal to ten pounds of tobacco, retaining in this compact form all the properties of the raw material, at the same time saving the very disagreeable and tedious operation of preparing the wash as is usually practised in this country. The only labor required with the article now offered to the public, is to stir the paste into the quantity of water needed for the Sheep that are intended to be dipped. This Sheep Wash is highly recommended and extensively used by the wool Growers of Australia and South Africa. The Samples that have been used by some of the Estancieros of this Country, have given the most perfect satisfaction, and are recommended by them as the most efficacious remedy ever used in this country; for further particulars apply either personally or by letter to

C. S. Reeves.

The Oil having already undergone the most perfect refining and the lamps are so simple that they can not be got out of order. NIL FALSI AUDEAM. NIL VERI NOX "AUDEAM DICERE". (Cicero.)

WEDNESDAY 23rd JULY 1862.

The March of Congress.

Two months have elapsed since the National Chambers were opened by General Mitre, and, if we consider the slow habits incidental to the climate, it must be admitted that our legislators have a good amount of lab or to show, in proof of their worthiness to carry out the great designs entrusted to them. No slight efforts were expected of them by the Executive at first; it was brushed that they would labored under a vis inertiæ which gave them excuse for absence on a passing shower, or even exception to a brindisi. Accordingly valuable time was frittered away in the Beginners of the Congress, when the grand question of municipals imperatively demanded consideration; and the public were condemned one day to go without dinner, in expectation of the sentence on the Cordoba Deputies. Here it would seem that the Lower Chamber favored undue procrastination, even more than their Senatorial brethren. Yet both Houses have now fairly set themselves to work, taking the heavier matters for dissection.

All preliminary measures, such as the new turn in events necessarily called forth, have been despatched by both, or either, of the Chambers, and the accession of Mitre to the Presidency will be a signal that the Republic is entered on its normal course of policy, and bid a long adieu to temporary arrangements or exceptional cases. The vote of confidence in our Governor has been completed by the late act, giving him possession of all the elements of National power. This would seem a corollary of the capital question, and was cleverly forced in to the Deputies, before the latter, which was still under debate in the Senate. Hereby the design of federalization loses its venom, for indeed Buenos Ayres has little left, when her characteristics of Nationality pass to the Executive of the Republic. At the same time, the cause of Argentine unity receives additional security from this consolidation of all the resources of the 14 provinces under one Master.

The railroad to Cordoba is a stride into the interior, which will regenerate a country first explored by the Jesuits and then neglected by civil rule. The expected purpose of the Senate, by the means of our senators now in provision, of the most possible of other sets of public measures look to the encouragement of immigration, and the settlement of unoccupied lands.

The [illegible] of the Chambers will be the [illegible] of the Executive, and [illegible] the good [illegible] though the low rate of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] back: the other is in a balsa: they are both accompanied with danger, even to a swimmer, particularly during the rainy season, when large stones and trunks of trees are carried down the stream with frightful rapidity. When the river is too deep to be forded, the traveller mounts an unsaddled horse, places his body in an inclined position, grasps with his hands the mane of the animal, which plunging into the stream, swims off with him to the opposite bank. The balsa is a boat made of a bullock's hide, and is constructed in the following manner. Take a dried bullock's hide, pinch up each of the four corners, put a stitch with a thorn to keep them together, and your boat is made. When about to be used, place it upon the water, bottom downwards, and to prevent its natural tendency to turn upwards, put one foot into the centre of it, and let the other follow with caution—then, standing in the middle of it, you then gradually contract your body downwards, and sit at the bottom; and the boat becomes perfectly steady.

The River Santiago del Estero is four hundred yards in width, and extremely rapid during the rainy season, when streams of water flow into it in their descent from the mountains. I crossed it on two occasions, on the road to the town whose name it bears, in this singular balsa, or boat, which is conducted by a poor, ragged, naked dor (swimmer) who, previous to taking charge of it, examines if it is leaky till it sinks an inch, or an inch and a half below the water's edge, when it is considered safe for transit.

There are few persons who cross this river without a feeling of nervous excitement—such was the case with me, even previous to my passage; for I thought that the balsa and myself would go to the bottom; this dread was considerably enhanced, as a naked peon plunged into the stream, and taking hold of the corner of the balsa, inquired if I was comfortable.—Voice V. hien ?—I replied to his question with a faltering yes—though my countenance must have belied the happy condition. A peon on shore gave a slight impulse to the balsa, which if the fellow in the water, I suppose, had not a corner with one hand, propelled out with the other, and swam with me to the opposite bank.

I felt an indescribable pleasure on landing, for I thought that the balsa would either have sunk, or have been overturned by hurricanes, which were buried down the stream, during the twenty minutes we were crossing it. Special care is required when two persons are passing in the water, the movement of one would incline the boat, its centre of gravity would be destroyed, and it would overturn, in consequence of which the passengers would be precipitated into the stream.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

Death of Mr. Buckle.

Mr. Buckle, the author of the "History of Civilization in England," died on the 31st of May, at Damascus. The premature decease of Mr. Buckle, at the early age of forty, before the completion of his great work will be a loss deplored by all—whatever may be their opinions on religious, social, or political theories—who seek to obtain correct data on which to exercise their judgment. Mr. Buckle was born at Lee, May 24, 1822. His father was a wealthy merchant, and he enjoyed the advantages of an excellent education in Dr. James Thomas Hodgway's school at Gordon House, Kentish Town, and also of having at his command an excellent and extensive library in his father's countinghouse; but instead of giving his attention to business, he devoted it to chess, and exhibited as much aptitude for this game that he gained the reputation of being one of the first players of England, if not of the world. His father dying in 1840 and leaving him an ample fortune, he was enabled to indulge his taste for books, and devoted himself theme forth entirely to literary pursuits, for which he was, by his seclusion as a student, better qualified than for more active occupations.

Entertainment to the representatives of the foreign press.

It is now definitively settled that the entertainment to be given to the representatives of the foreign press over in London will take place on the 4th of October evening at St. James's Hall. This project, originally set on foot by the members of the Savage Club, has received the hearty approval and co-operation of gentlemen, eminent not only in journalism, but in various branches of literature, science, and art, and several prominent members of the provincial press have intimated their intention to take part in this laudable demonstration. There can be no difficulty or difficulty in the fellow impression which many of the Continental literary friends appear to have received of English life and character from those bringing them into close contact with those who are most capable of enlightening them on these points, and this entertainment will therefore not only be a grace-ful act of courtesy, but may be productive of substantially useful results.

LIFE IN CHINA.—A private letter from China gives a curious view of the state of things in the empire. The letter says:—"Our situation is magnificent. But the people are very turbulent. We live in a perpetual state of warfare, have our houses broken into periodically, and have been compelled to open the Concession more than once at the point of the bayonet. As we can not only command, but when actually attacked can subjugate the Chinese, rather than the Chinese can subjugate us, we have the best of it. They have no regular army, and their soldiers are very poor stuff. They have no [illegible] to walk long with.
